iPhone 7 has only just launched, but that's exactly when everyone wants to buy all the accessories they need to go with them. Pickings may be slim at first, as manufacturers do final tests and ramp up productions, but there's already some really good gear on the market, and more to come!

Below are my favorites, as of launch week. As more and better iPhone 7 accessories become available, I'll update with the best of what comes next, so check back often!

- iPhone 7 Leather Case

- CLEAN Screen Cleaner Kit
- Maxboost screen protector
- Anker PowerCore+

iPhone 7 Leather Case

It breaks my heart to put something as iconic as apple iPhone 7 — especially in the new blacks! — in a case, but here's the deal: If you want that finish to last, you need to take care of it. Apple, of course, has the advantage here. They've known for a while exactly what iPhone 7 looks like, and so they're once again first out the gate with high quality, high finish cases.

They feel different this year than last, fit the different-sized camera on the back of iPhone 7s, and match the rest of Apple's fall color lineup. They're not ultra-protective, and they're not ultra-slim. They're affordable luxury, with microfiber lining and rich, soft-tanned European leather.

Bose QuietComfort 35 wireless headphones

Note: Apple will be releasing their own AirPods in October. They use the W1 chip and software magic in iOS 10 to make pairing and switching easier and better than ever. I've used them, but can't really include them here until they ship. So, if you need a BT headset now, now, now...

New Apple iPhone 7 has no headphone jack — maybe you heard? I know I did, which is one of the reasons I picked up a pair of Bose Q35 back in July. That and about a dozen hard recs from colleagues here and friends everywhere. And like them, I was blown away by the sound quality.

Connect the Q35 over Bluetooth, strap them on, and Bose's incredible noise-cancelling technology takes over. Then the coffee shop din, the airplane engines, the shouting in the park, even the relatives visiting for the day — what? — all go away. Well, for up to 20 hours per charge, at least.

These are over the ear headphones and they're big. Full on cans, so to speak. But they're not overly heavy, and they're hello comfortable, as the name implies.

You can get them in black and silver to match your black or metallic iPhone.

Apple Lightning Dock

If you need a dock that can both charge your apple iPhone 7 and let you listen to 3.5mm headphones at the same time, Apple has you covered. You can keep it at your desk or beside your bed and then charge and listen as much as you want. It might be a nice-to-have for watching video, but it's a must-have for people with low or no vision.

Available in silver, gold, rose gold, and — of course — all new black!

(If you need a charge-and-listen adapter for when you're on the go, check out what Belk in has coming).
